

will be leaving now, I'm sure you'll be pleased because you can take your time making this place look decent". The King's excitement fades from his face. He takes a seat in his throne and sighs, "so you just plan on helping this man wish for his girl? Do you not have any ambitions of your own?". Richer smiles, "I think it's pretty dumb too, but he's fun. You know that considering that big cat scratch he left you with. Once that fun dies out I'll have a fun time killing him". The King becomes intrigued and attempts to hide his grin, "so do you have any wish you want to come true?". "No, not this round anyways. I'll make it happen next time" Richer casually answers.

The King reaches out his hand, "you and I have similar goals. I just wish for these games to continue forever, why don't we help each other for this round?". Richer face sinks into a scowl, "I'm planning on making a wish next games, so why would I ally with a future enemy?". The King laughs, "have you met a non player named Julius Cesaer yet?". "Get to the point old man..." Richer groans. "That man is the most ambitious in the entire history of Ur. He's gotten extremely close to making a wish happen several times, and this time he allied himself with Daniel. You and I still have a fairly large chance to have our goal be accomplished, but with this addition, you have to admit, there is a slight chance that man manipulates a victory". Richer's head swivels back to Mical, "who did you say put that sword into you and sent you to kill Leonne?". "Cesear" Mical grunts. Richer looks back at the King, "if you want an alliance, then it will be by my terms and not yours".

Mical grabs the sleeve of Richer's coat, "please no, I have to see her smile, you can't do this". Richer kicks Mical off of him, "if you want her to smile, then you should have worked harder for it and made it happen. Quit relying on me to make your dream happen". Richer looks back at Nebuchadnezzar, "I will stay here and work with you to kill Julius Ceasar. After that man is dead I will kill you after. Also we will allow this pathetic man to leave. Julius and that man have their sights on each other anyways, so he might even beat us to it". Nebuchadnezzar hits his staff on the ground and forms a second throne next to his, that is one inch smaller than his own, "come, take a seat next to me". Richer casually plops into the throne, and as he does his Philosopher's Stone glows red, and Nebuchadnezzar's throne sinks one inch into the ground so they are now even, "comfy seat, I see why you stay here".

Mical's rage boils. The veins in his head nearly burst while he debates on exactly how to curse Richer, but then all this ends when Richer says, "so go, and kill Julius for me". Mical understands the true meaning of Richer's actions. Richer allied himself with Nebuchadnezzar under the sole condition of Julius still living, so he wants to give Mical a second chance at winning Ur by pushing him to kill Julius. Mical also deduces that Richer probably wants the chance to learn a thing or two about his enemy, but nonetheless Mical cherishes Richer's second chance of life and refuses to let him down. He quickly escapes, leaving the room to be eerily silent.

Luke sits bored, forgetting he even has his Primera Verth active, "Daniel, what is next in this training?". Daniel claps with joy and excitement on her face, "you're doing so good! It took you a bit, but I knew you'd get there! The next step is to learn the perfected Primera Verth, instead of glowing blue, it will glow a bright red, and the more you master it, the less it will glow and the less collateral damage your weapon will deal, but the intensity of its' impact is only matched by the strongest magic". "So how do I do that?" Luke asks while examining his weapon. "You already started the process, see how your weapon isn't destroying everything anymore, just the area close to it?" Daniel hints. "Yeah I see, so I have to restrain all the power of it into the object?" Luke guesses. Daniel's face lights up, "I knew you'd get it! If you are able to master that by the end of tonight, then you can spend all day
